Chapter 1 by Cameron Neill

There is a fine line between confidence and arrogance. Between bravery and foolhardiness. As I stood with my back against the locked door I finally saw the line. The flames advanced with sickening speed and I realised that this was the moment I was going to die. No heroics. No family gathered around my bedside. Nobody would ever know and I would disappear from the world with no more thought than one would give a gust of wind.

"Well, this is a good a time as any to finally admit it," I said to no-one in particular.
